ALISON BROOKS ARCHITECTS, London

With complex masterplans and large-scale housing projects, Alison Brooks Architects have established a reputation as perceptive specialists for architectonic and urban planning contexts. A site-specific and experimental approach is characteristic for the designs of the London-based architects. Prior to founding ABA in England in 1996, Canadian-born Alison Brooks was a partner at Ron Arad Associates. Today, she teaches Urban Design and Housing at the Architectural Association, and her projects have been recognized with numerous prestigious awards, including the Stephen Lawrence Prize (2006), the Manser Medal for UK Projects (2007), and the Stirling Prize (2008).

Among the most renowned projects of Alison Brooks Architects are the Folkestone Arts and Business Centre "Quarterhouse" (2009), which with its backlit facade of fluted mesh cladding has become a new landmark for this English coastal city, and the Accordia Living complex in Cambridge, where the architects conceived apartment buildings that provide clever solutions to the question of the quality of life and living in the future.
